

ONE STRIKE IS BROUGHT TO END

Peace Between Cooks and Waiters and Employers.

CONTRACT IS SATISFACTORY

STRUGGLE OF UNION BARBERS AGAINST NON-UNION SHOPS.

AFTER a long consultation between the arbitration committee and the committee of restaurant men who prepared the "employers' agreement," as a compromise measure, the latter document, with some changes, was accepted by both committees, and the difficulties between the originators of the document and the union were declared settled. During the conference of the committees, all the points of contention on both sides were smoothed over in a satisfactory manner to all concerned, and the declaration of both restaurants and the arbitration committee is that the trouble is over. The amended agreement was signed by three restaurants, the majority of the others express their willingness to sign it, and the cooks and waiters are satisfied with it.

While this compromise was being effected in the Chesapeake restaurant, the barbers, in a meeting in the Federal hall, decided to change their tactics and attempt to bring the dissenting shops into union lines by securing their men as members of the union, which will make it incumbent upon them to refuse to work after 7 p. m.

Both Sides Willing. The meeting at the Chesapeake was attended by the three members of the arbitration committee and Messrs. Finch, Wiegand and Shaffer, the originators of the compromise agreement. This document was taken up, and each article was discussed from the viewpoints of both sides. Both sides were willing to make reasonable concessions, and after some minor changes had been made in the document, which made it practically the same as the amended contract presented by the arbitration committee at a previous date, it was accepted by the proprietors and by the committee in behalf of the cooks and waiters.

Among the changes made in the agreement was the stipulation of the portion stating that within a non-union man was hired he would be given ten days to apply for membership in the union. This was altered to read eight days, the same being embodied in the arbitration contract.

The clause requiring the employee who was granted a lay-off to pay a substitute was stricken out, the proprietors agreeing to the arbitration contract, which provided that the employee might pay the amount from his wages, or the employer might pay it and deduct the amount from the salary of the employee.

Matter of Lay-off. The clause providing that the two men who lay off on the same day shall be one from the kitchen and one from the dining room was stricken out, the clause of the arbitration contract, which provides that the two who are the most conveniently spared shall be allowed to lay off, being accepted in its stead.

The last clause, which provided that the signers of the contract will not be bound to any future demands of the union, was the subject of considerable debate. The arbitration committee held that it was superfluous, and should be stricken out, but the restaurant men wanted it to remain to protect them against any demand that might be made after the contract had gone into effect, and to which they were not willing to agree.

As soon as these changes had been made the three restaurant men present signed the agreement, and it was signed by one who had canvassed all the other restaurants, and all but one or four were willing to sign it. It was, accordingly, decided to have the amended agreement written out and copies presented to each proprietor as soon as practicable.

Employers Will Sign. According to the statement of the arbitration committee, eight proprietors have already signed the contract presented by them, and will stand by it. As soon as the others who have expressed themselves as willing have signed the proprietors' agreement, the difficulty between the union and the proprietors will be considered at an end, regardless of the three or four articles that still refuse to enter into any agreement.

"We have simply handled the matter as a business proposition," said Chairman F. Gregory of the arbitration committee, "Neither side claims a victory, and neither will claim one. We simply met on a common ground, and the matter is practically settled. Of course there are some other minor matters to be attended to, but we expect to have their disposition of before the meeting of the Federation next Friday night."

The matter could have been settled in this same way, weeks ago, but each side seemed a little suspicious of the other, and wanted to hold back.

Meeting of Barbers. The barbers, some thirty or forty in number, met in the Federation hall and discussed methods of procedure in their efforts to secure the recognition of the union by every shop. They have had "picket" out, etc., and trade away from the non-union shops, but they decided to change tactics for a time, at least, and then to employ a large number of "pickets" if the dissenters still persisted in holding out.

The picket who has been doing service, it was learned, was stationed on Second South street last Thursday night to divert trade from three non-union shops who have persisted in denying the union. This man, it was learned, had turned away some trade, but the work accomplished by him was not sufficient to make any material difference to the proprietors. It was, accordingly, proposed to seek to bring about the desired ends, not by antagonistic methods, but by inducing all journeymen to become members of the union.

Will Force Stubborn Ones. The men then, it was argued, would refuse to work after 7 o'clock in the evening, and the proprietors would be forced to close in accordance with union rules. The union men decided to constitute themselves, it is said, into a committee of solicitors, and an attempt will be made in this manner to force the dissenters into line.

Beside these matters, it was decided to send for a charter and union cards to place in each shop joining the union. After this business had been completed the meeting adjourned until next Wednesday night.

LOW LEVEL OF LAKE

Section Director Murdoch of the Weather Bureau Explains What It Is Due To.

The attention of L. H. Murdoch, section director of the weather bureau, was yesterday called to an article in the Transcript, in which the editor attempts to show that the present low level of Great Salt Lake is due to sinking artesian wells in its basin. It commenting upon this and other articles, Mr. Murdoch stated that it is astonishing the amount of mysticism which many writers attach to the rises and falls of the lake. There are only two causes which can produce a material fall in the lake level: Firstly, a shortage in the precipitation; and, secondly, any condition which causes an excess of evaporation over the drainage basin of the lake.

The diverting of large quantities of water from the streams flowing into the lake and spreading it over the fields for the purpose of irrigation certainly increases the evaporation and causes some fall in the lake level, but the fall from this cause is insignificant when compared with the fall resulting from the shortage in precipitation.

"The maximum lake level in 1888 was 9.2 feet; in 1901 it was 1.8 feet," said Mr. Murdoch, "which shows a fall of 7.4 feet. About a year ago I published an article entitled 'Relation of the Water Level of Great Salt Lake to the Precipitation,' in which it was shown that the shortage in precipitation for the fifteen years ending 1900 was 14.7 inches, which in itself seems sufficient to account for the fall of 7.4 feet in the lake level, and causes me to believe that irrigation has had very little to do with it."

"The precipitation for the basin during the past year has been just about normal, and it is safe to predict that for the current year, which will be reached in June, will not be lower than that of last year, and if the precipitation for the first six months of the year is normal, the level will be a few inches higher."

"There is also no mystery in regard to the annual fluctuations of the lake level," continued Mr. Murdoch. "The lake reaches its lowest level at the close of the year and its highest level in June. The dry season is from June to September, inclusive, and during this period evaporation is at its maximum. Most of the snow in the mountains has melted by June and very little water reaches the lake, while a very large amount is lost by evaporation. The lake level begins its annual decline. This continues until the end of the year, for the reason that the heavier precipitation which begins with November is mostly in the form of snow, and therefore, does not reach the lake for some time. The wet period continues until May. With the increase of temperature in June, the snow in the mountains is melted and the lake makes a rapid rise."

Council Committee Pays Visit to Fire Station.

The new fire committee of the city council made an inspection of the central and different sub-stations of the fire department yesterday for the purpose of personally learning the needs and requirements of the department to be recommended at the regular meeting of the council.

Two of the members were absent at the inspection, Daveler, Davis and Vignas being present. The different pieces of apparatus were examined and several test calls sent in. It is not definitely known what report the committee will make to the council, but it is generally believed that the recommendations which were incorporated in Chief Devine's annual report will be favorably acted upon.

STATE NEWS

MAY BE TRIED AGAIN

Life Prisoner For Murder, Connors May Be Put on Trial For Burglary.

Provo, Feb. 9.—It is reported here that Frank Connors, who is serving a life sentence in the state prison for killing Heinrich's store at Scofield the night before they came down to Provo, and the staff they took from the store, mostly jewelry, watches, etc., here, the men were arrested for killing Strong.

Morris, who was not considered to have anything to do with the killing of Strong, but he escaped from the county jail in this city before he could be brought to trial.

The reason Connors will be tried is that it is thought he will attempt to obtain his liberty under habeas corpus proceedings, as several convicts have succeeded in doing who were convicted under similar proceedings, viz: Under an information filed by the district attorney, which, under a ruling of the supreme court, was declared to be contrary to law and that the instrument should be filed by the county attorney, under the law as then in force.

It is believed that the reason Connors has not instituted habeas corpus proceedings before is that he is waiting till the burglary charge could not be brought, being barred by the statute of limitations, which would be in four years from the time when the offense was committed. And the officers now think it probable that he will come up with the burglary charge so that if he should be released he could be held to serve for the second offense. Of course, he would be arrested if released on habeas corpus on the charge of killing Strong, provided he did not succeed in evading arrest, which has been done in one or two cases of the same nature. But it would be more difficult to convict on the murder charge now than when Connors was convicted on account of several witnesses being dead and out of the country, and for other reasons, although the effort will be made if there is any occasion for it.

Officer Strong was killed about midnight Jan. 25, 1899, while he was talking Morris, who, with Connors, had come in from the east over the Rio Grande Western railway on a train, and was as a vagrant. The evidence was all circumstantial, but the theory of the prosecution was that Morris came up behind Officer Strong and his prisoner with the intention of liberating the latter, and that he struck the officer on the head with a hatchet, expecting to stun him. The blow did not have the desired effect, but the officer pulled a pistol, at which point Connors drew his pistol and fired the fatal shot. Connors was arrested a short distance west of the city on the second morning after the killing, and Morris was arrested a short time after in Springfield.

The officer on duty at the state prison last evening had heard nothing of the proposed trial of Connors, but the first information received there would be an order to produce the man in court.
